Eden

Gender: He/Him

Voice: Young-masculine / gender neutral

Backstory:

Formed of the clay of Andora's son, Eden was born in the court of Life with the soul-purpose to be by the God of Life's side, though fate took an ill turn.

Eden was orphaned at a young age after an accident in the Garden (God of Death's domain) took Eden's parents prematurely. Death, trying to clean up the mess his previous avatar made, felt guilty for leaving Eden all alone and took the young boy under his care. Eden grew up with Death, growing into the position of Death's apprentice.

Voice Profile:

Juvenile, Heart of your sleeve,

God of Death - Ahkir

Gender: He/Him
Voice: Old, masculine

Backstory:

Ahkir became the successor to Grim, the previous god of Death who was known for their ruthlessness. When Ahkir succeeded him and became the new god of Death, he took a kinder approach, more so guiding the souls of the dead than harvesting them for new life to form. He has had the position for around 130 years now, having led all his kin to the afterlife.

Dara, his previous apprentice, worked under him for a decade before they had a large falling-out about Dara's mother, who was critically ill. During a particularly physical debate Dara smashed some watches closest to him, which turned out to be the watches of Eden's parents. Dara left in anger after he didn't get what he wanted, and left to go join the Court of Knowledge. Death let him go without a fight.

When Ahkir went to clean up Dara's mess he met Eden and took the young boy under his wing. Neither of them had anyone after all.

Voice Profile:

kind and understanding, extremely patient, a fond edge to the voice, Old

God of Life - Andora

Gender: He/him
Voice: Feminine

Backstory:

Being the direct offspring of Mira, the goddess of life, Andora was pushed into the role of Avatar practically since he was born. Andora is a sculptor like all gods of life were before him, creating humans from the clay he is provided*.

When Andora's son from his mortal days died in battle, he reused his son's clay to create Eden. It did not fill the hole grief made as he hoped it would, and when Eden fell into death's hands too (only more metaphorical this time as he joined the court of Death) he had had enough.

Seeing his creations, his children, die over the centuries has been a burden, a growing heartache that Andora does not want to deal with anymore.

And so came the plan to kill Death. To have her creations, her loved ones last forever together with him. He came to Ezmos, the God of Knowledge, and together with half of the pantheon they started to put things in motion.

**Human souls are created and recycled when humans die, meaning that yes, there are only so many souls that can roam the earth. The clay comes from a person's previous life. It also happens often that soul mates are created from the same clay.*

Voice Profile:

Kind, Feminine, nearly like a mother

God of the Sun - Lior

Gender: they/them

Voice: Masculine

Backstory:

Lior was raised as a warrior priest in the court of the Sun, where truth and discipline are valued most. They have always had a supreme sense of justice and took this with them as they reached divinity.

Lior met Lune, the future god of the Moon, when they were very young and quickly got acquainted as they had a lot in common. What had been a friendship became more, but was quickly put to the side as they both had become avatars to their respected gods.

After a long decade, Lior became the god of the Sun. During a diplomacy meeting they saw Lune for the first time in 17 years, but this time as the God of the Moon. They instantly fell for each other again and continued their relationship as if they had only seen each other yesterday.

The courts merged into the Court of Sky as they shared their power together. Now they just want to be together forever, and killing Death will definitely do that trick.

Voice Profile:

Strong willed, outspoken, tall-queen energy, quick to action & anger

God of the Moon - Lune

Gender: He/Him
Voice: Masculine

Backstory:

Born and raised in the court of the Moon, Lune's entire life has revolved around the gods. He met Lior, a girl his age from the court of the Sun, at a young age and they became swift friends and their friendship quickly turned into more. The only reason why their relationship was tolerated was because the courts of Sun and Moon were on pretty good terms.

Through the years they grew in their respective court's ranks and managed to become the avatars of their gods. When Lune succeeded his god, Alon, he found out Lior had succeeded the old goddess of the Sun, Solara.

They reacquainted and quickly fell in love again like they had so many years ago. The courts merged into the Court of Sky as they shared their power together. Now they just want to be together forever, and killing Death will definitely do that trick.

Voice Profile:

Slightly sultry, earnest, soft spoken, very demure

God of Desire - Eli

Gender: He/him - They/them

Voice: masculine

Backstory:

The Court of Desire comes in many forms, and when Hunter took over the title of God of Desire by seducing and murdering his predecessor he spun its previous take on desire in a more primal way. The previous god, having been a man of money and power, had created a court of wolves. Hunter despised this and cleansed the ranks and put on top him most loyal.

Hunter is a hedonist in nature, desiring all that the world can give him. He values loyalty over all so when his old friend Ahkir, the now god of Death came with a message from fate, he listened and agreed to help. He would have to stand by and watch as Ahkir got murdered by their peers.

Voice Profile:

Masculine, seductive, Asterion-vibes,

Goddess of Knowledge - Ezmos

Gender: She/her

Voice: Feminine-ish / gender neutral

Backstory:

Ezmos was already pretty old when she became the goddess of Knowledge, having gotten her position by planning the perfect takeover of her master's court, which at that moment belonged to Tharos, an old god still from the second generation of divinity. He was slow in his ways. Ezmos despised this.

Ezmos wasn't the avatar of Knowledge. That title belonged to some poor sod she killed before stealing the court from the god by finding his watch stuffed in a book of Tharos' personal secret collection.

The power came to her from her devotion, and as soon as she took over the court she made some alterations. For the sake of knowledge and progress she opened grand libraries as her temples, and let scholars learn there as her disciples.

She knows she is the best God of Knowledge that has ever been, and ending that to make way for the next generation is not only a detriment to the society of humans but would be downright criminal in the history books. Ezmos must stay here in this post to guide the foolish, and here she'll stay. She must only kill Death to do so

Voice Profile:

bitter grandma vibes, Gertrude from the magnus archives but actually just selfish and not a bad bitch, boastful, literally a know-it-all
